

BANANAS HANDOUT

Northern Alameda County Family Resource Guide Referral Information for Child Care Providers

As a child care provider, you often come in contact with families under stress or in need of support services and information. You are in a key position to help families and the children you care for by listening and offering resources to support parents as they try to solve their problems. BANANAS has compiled this list of community resources to assist you in helping families in your care. If you need more information, or if you would like to talk about your concerns, you can always call our Warmline staff at 658-6046.

Child Abuse – As a child care provider, you are a mandated reporter of suspected child abuse. Mandated reporters must report abuse and cannot be held liable for doing so. If you suspect neglect, physical, or sexual abuse, you must report your concerns to the Alameda County Children’s Protective Services (CPS). It is the CPS staff’s decision whether a report requires an investigation by a social worker (not all do) and whether police involvement is warranted. Children are not usually taken from their homes unless they are found to be in danger. As the person who makes the report, you are entitled to know the results of the investigation. Call the BANANAS Warmline, 658-6046, if you want support in making a decision to report suspected child abuse.

Since 1994, Megan’s Law requires that sex offenders register with the police in order to help protect our community. The website, www.meganslaw.ca.gov, provides detailed information on registered sex offenders in California neighborhoods. You will be directed to a legal disclaimer before you can enter the site.
